Edmond Schütz Obituary

With regret we were informed of the passing away of Professor Edmond Schütz, one of Europe's leading armenologists, and founding member of the AIEA. Prof. Schütz was known to many of us as an amiable person, a helpful colleague and above all as an insightful and learned scholar.

Born in Budapest, in 1916, Schütz studied Hungarian and Finno-Ugric linguistics as well as Inner-Asian Studies with such famous scholars as Gombocz, Németh, and Ligeti. His interest in Armenian Studies is related to these areas; much of his work concerns Armeno-Kipchak and the contacts between the Asian world and Armenia, in the Mongolian and Il-Khanid periods. He conducted his research as head of the Altaic Research Group of the Hungarian Academy of Science, and from 1962 onwards regularly lectured at Indiana University, Bloomington, with his former co-student Denis Sinor. In 1990 Schütz was elected an ordinary member of the Armenian Academy of Sciences. Schütz was a gifted armenologist, whose main interest was in history and linguistics of the Middle Armenian period. He spoke Armenian fluently and in the years of the cold war he served as a trait-d'union between Armenia and the scholars of the "Western" world. His many papers are gems of learning, opening up sources which only a man with his particular wide erudition was able to access. He has remained scientifically active until the end of his life; he had given some of his most important work (such as the 14th century Rasulid Hexaglot) in print when he became 80 years. At that occasion, the Hungarian Academy honoured him by devoting an issue of Acta Orientalia (L, 1997) to this eminent scholar.

Edmond Schütz's scholarship will remain with us and from time to time, memories of his kind personality will make us smile. His lasting contribution to Armenology has been best expressed by F. Sargissian, when Schütz was awarded a distinction of the Armenian Academy in 1996: "You have consacrated a great deal to the education of new Armenologists and to the interest of Armenian Studies all over the world. ... It is due to your ardent work and noble character that in Armenia and in wide scholarly circles you have become a deeply venerated and beloved personality".

A short biography of Edmond Schütz by István Vásáry appeared in the Acta Orientalia Academiae Scientiarum Hungaricae, Tomus L, 1997: v - vii. Vásáry also adds a bibliography of Edmond Schütz, ibid. pp. ix - xii, containing 64 published items and 6 items in print. A selection of Schütz's work has appeared as Armeno-Turcica (Selected Papers), Indiana Univ. Uralic and Altaic Series vol. 164, Bloomington Indiana 1998, xii. 420 pp.

The contents of this volume give a clear testimony of Schütz's armenological interests.

Konstantin Khudaverdian Obituary

Armenian State Television announced during its regular nightly newbulletin on April 19, 1999, that Dr. Prof. Konstantin Khudaverdian, the editor-in-chief of "The Armenian Encyclopaedia" (Haykakan Hanragitaran) institution since 1988, has passed away, aged 70.

AIEA Committee Elections 1999

Two seats on the AIEA Committee became vacant on 31 December 1998 when the terms of office of Prof. Bernard Coulie and Prof. R. Thomson came to an end. The Committee asked Profs. R. Schmitt of Saarbrücken and C. Burchard of Heidelberg to form a subcommittee to monitor the elections to fill the two vacancies for a term of three years (by postal vote in accordance with the Constitution). Prof. Coulie declared his willingness to stand for re-election. In addition, the Committee nominated Dr. Valentina Calzolari, Secretary of AIEA and a co-opted member of the Committee whose term of office is expiring, as a candidate for election. A call for further nominations, to arrive no later than 13 March 1999, was published in the Newsletter No 28, December 1998.

The deadline was extended as the Newsletter did not reach all members in due time. No nominations or other comment were received. The subcommittee therefore declares B. Coulie et V. Calzolari elected.

Heidelberg, 5 May 1999.

For the subcommittee:
Christopher Burchard

Hebrew University Armenian Students Organization Activities

Public Lecture

On June 10th 1999 a lecture was organized by the Armenian Students Organization of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, at which numerous students were present. Dr. Roberta Ervine (Department of Armenian Studies) lectured on The Armenians in the Ottoman Empire. Dr. Ervine spoke about the formation of the Armenian community in Constantinople, its relation with the Ottoman government, the relation between Echmiadzin and Constantinople and the relation between Echmiadzin and Jerusalem. She also discussed the economic contribution of the Armenians to the Ottoman Empire and their importance in the system of Millets.

On Campus Activities

Like other student groups, this year the Armenian Student Organization of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem took part in the daily activities on the campus of the University. For three days from June 8th till June 10th ASO intensively acted on the campus. Alongside other organizations and parties ASO set up an official desk in the central campus. Numerous pamphlets and booklets concerning Armenian history in general and the Armenian Genocide in particular were distributed to students. Next year ASO will increase its activities by organizing lectures concerning Armenian History including the Armenian Genocide and a Day of Armenian Culture will be held.

Support for Armenian Studies Conference

ASO members served as volunteer ushers for the Conference and Banquet celebrating 30 Years of Armenian Studies in the Hebrew University held on May 24-26, 1999. The role of ASO was acknowledged at the Conference Banquet and University President Menahem Magidor had a lively discussion with the Armenian Students who were present at the Banquet.

Armenian Studies in US Congressional Record

A statement on the 30th Anniversary of the Armenian Studies Program at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem was read into the Congressional Record by Congressman Frank Pallone of New Jersey. In addition to referring to the Jerusalem Armenian Studies Program, Mr. Pallone's statement also touches on a number of other matters of Armenian interest. It may be found in the Congressional Record, Washington, Thursday, May 6, 1999 Vol. 145 No. 65, Proceedings and Debates of the 106th Congress, First Session. Prof. Zekiyan: The Formative Period of Armenian Christian 'Ideology'

Beirut, Tuesday, 23 February, 1999. What he called "the last formative period" of Armenian Christian 'ideology', corresponding to the fifth-seventh centuries AD, was the focus of a lecture given by Prof. Levon Zekiyan at Haigazian University on Friday, 12 February 1999. Zekiyan, chair of the Department of Armenian Language and Literature at the University of Venice, was on a ten-day lecture tour of Syria and Lebanon.

Zekiyan based his own understanding of the term 'ideology' on a definition suggested by the French scholar, François Chatelet: ideology is a system of ideas which concerns the individual in his relationships with other men, the society, his past, his future, God (or its substitutes) and destiny.

According to Zekiyan, the famous hymn of the birth of the pagan god, Vahagn - going back in its actual form to the pre-Artaxiad period of Armenian history, but as to its mythical content, concerning specially the fight of Vahagn against the devil, to a much earlier period - is one of the earliest indications of the gradual formation of a proper Armenian 'ideology'. That 'ideology' was, at that early stage, still very close to other Indo-European beliefs held commonly with the Iranians and Indians. Zekiyan contrasted this early Indo-European trend with the pro-Greek orientation that developed among the Armenians later. This pro-Western trend becomes evident during the reign of the Artaxiad dynasty in general and of King Tigran II the Great in particular. It later manifests itself in the once widely-held -but unfortunately useless- belief that Armenia would only be saved from foreign rule if it received direct military assistance from the West. Zekiyan argued, at the same time, that the fourth century AD Roman historian Ammianus Marcellinus was one of the rare Western authors of antiquity to understand the importance of Armenia for the West.

Zekiyan was more detailed in the section of his lecture, which dealt with the contributions of Mesrop Mashtots and Movses Khorenatsi to the 'definitive' formation, in its essential trends, of a separate Armenian Christian 'ideology'.

Although this 'ideology' has since been modified, and new typologies have emerged, he said, its basic understandings are still with us.

Zekiyan described Mashtots as not only a great religious and intellectual figure, but also as a great political genius, whose motives when inventing a separate Armenian alphabet were both religious and deeply ideological. Mashtots was hoping to save the Armenians from future dangers of assimilation when he attempted to move the issue of a separate identity from the political to the cultural level. Had the motive of creating a new alphabet simply been to facilitate the propagation of Christianity, there would have been no need- according to Zekiyan- to try to teach it in Byzantine Armenia. He brought to the attention of the audience the fact that even today Armenians use the metaphor of 'soldiers' or of a 'fortress' to indicate the function of the letters of their alphabet in the life of the people.

Zekiyan said that Movses Khorenatsi was the best interpreter of Mashtots's ideas and work. Moreover, Khorenatsi also came up with a new synthesis to define the Armenian identity. He took from the classical Greeks the idea of "politeia" and merged it with the concept of the unity of the ethnos as defined by Philo of Alexandria. The result was a new, secular conception of the Armenian ethnos/nation; this conception is open to religious faith, but does not imply it as a pre-condition.

Zekiyan's lecture was based on four of his articles, and a recent book, published in French, Italian, German, and English:

Dr. Susan Pattie Lectures At Haigazian University An Anthropologist of the Armenian Diaspora

Dr. Susan Pattie's (University College, London) own experiences as an anthropologist during her past fieldwork among the Armenians of Cyprus and London, as well as her current research on the Armenian community in the village of Kessab in northern Syria, were the topics of her lecture at Haigazian University on 11 March 1999.

Pattie has a Ph.D. in Cultural Anthropology from the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. Her Ph.D. dissertation was published as a book under the title Faith in History: Armenians Rebuilding Community by the Smithsonian Institution Press in 1997.

Pattie said that any study of the Armenian communities of the Diaspora should necessarily be based on field work carried out on a participant-observation basis, interviews with ordinary people living in the community that is being studied, as well as on the existing secondary literature.

Pattie continued that the issue of identity and the feeling of insecurity were central to most Armenians living in the Diaspora - especially to the community that she observed in Cyprus. The existence of many Armenian communities scattered around the world and the traditionally strong family ties are undeniable resources for most Diasporan Armenians as they travel from one country to another and try to settle down wherever, they think, there is a promise for some stability and economic prosperity. Flexibility is a key for the survival of the Armenian Diaspora. As an example, she pointed out some of the difficulties that Cypriot Armenians faced after settling in London. The Western emphasis on individualism, the different style of education, and the monolingual culture in Britain forced parents to adopt new tactics when pushing their children to continue speaking Armenian at home and to study how to read and write it in Saturday- or Sunday-schools.

Responding to the perennial question "who is the 'real' Armenian?" which has frequently been a source of quarrel in the Diaspora, Pattie reminded the audience that Robin Cohen, one of the foremost contemporary experts on diasporas in the modern world, predicts that the various diasporas in the world will manage to adapt to the contemporary trends in globalization. She urged those present to celebrate the flexibility that the Diasporan Armenians have mustered and to appreciate the creative element attendant to living in the Diaspora. She said that Diasporan Armenian perceptions of where their homeland is have changed now that Armenia has regained its independence. Many Diasporan Armenians today feel themselves more at home in the Diaspora than in the homeland, but this should not stop them from seeking a constructive relationship between the homeland and the Diaspora both now and in the future. Many of the above-mentioned ideas were further clarified by Dr. Pattie during the question-and-answer session that followed her presentation.

A study of the Julfan Armenians in the Eurasian silk trade in Early Modern times. The book is the first to situate a major aspect of Safavid Iran's political economy, in the global context of world trade and early modern state-building. Based on Safavid, European and Armenian documents, it demonstrates that the production, distribution and export of Iranian silk, Europe's major eastern import, was in the hands of deportees from the Caucasus. A focus on the political and financial ties between converted ghulam administrators and the Julfan Armenian merchants, brings to light, for the first time, a major component of Safavid Iran's planned political economy through documenting the link between the mint, the palace administration and the Armenian silk traders. It sheds light on the central role of local Asian merchants and contributes to a major debate against Orientalism and Eurocentrism in the study of cross-cultural trade. India, Iran, the Ottoman Empire and Europe are considered together in this global and comparative study of Armenian world trade based in the Persian capital of Isfahan, where a study of the Iranian context remains central.

Turkish Atrocities is composed of twenty-two eyewitness accounts of the Armenian Genocide; each statement distinguishes between events personally observed by the author and events recounted to the author by others. Turkish Atrocities provides testimonies drawn from the whole expanse of the Ottoman Empire.

In 1918 Reverend James L. Barton, head of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions asked missionaries who had served in the Ottoman Empire to file such detailed reports. (One of these, a book-length report about Kharpert [Harpoot], has been published separately by the Gomidas Institute: Henry H. Riggs, Days of Tragedy in Armenia.) The reports were submitted to an American Presidential commission examining various aspects of World War I, including the genocide of Armenians. The statements provide critical evidence of events constituting the Armenian Genocide.

The major part of the book covers the little known but important battles of WWI, with chapters on Enver's offensive in December 1914, the battle of Malazgirt in 1915, the battles of Koprukoy and Erzurum in 1916, and the Caucasian Front in the last two years of the war. The book ends with an epilogue on the Government of South-West Caucasia and the Dagestan Revolt.
